Model Animation

Model animation, such as in the Wallace and Gromit films, originally developed _____ from _____ puppet shows.

These have _____ always _____ been popular, particularly in Europe.

The basic principles of model animation are the same as for drawn animation. Initial ideas and storyboards are drawn on paper, before the models are _____ built _____.

The models are made using different types of _____ material _____.

Plasticine or modelling clay can be moulded around a wire _____ skeleton _____. Layers are added _____ until _____ the final shape is complete and every detail is shown. Adding _____ clothes _____ can make the models look more colourful.

Models' body parts do not have to be in _____ proportion _____. They stand up better if they have big feet. These give the models extra _____ support _____.
The models are then placed in a set, _____ which _____ must relate to their size and height. When characters are in their houses, their heads should not touch the ceiling!

Early films using model animation were often silent because it was _____ impossible _____ to make models 'speak'.
New techniques have overcome these _____ difficulties _____ and talking models and voice-overs are now used. Animators sometimes talk to _____ themselves _____ in front of the mirror to watch how their faces change. The _____ problem _____ is trying to make a model's face move in the same way! It is _____ amazing _____ how realistic Plasticine models have become.
